

December 5, 2022

Commissioner Rosa, Chancellor Young, and Members of the Board of Regents:

As parents, students, educators, and advocates from across New York State, we urge you to decouple Regents exams from high school graduation requirements.

In 2020, 2021, and January 2022, COVID-19 Regents exam exemptions reassured us that if students demonstrated mastery of State standards through their coursework, the pandemic would not affect their ability to graduate. While this experiment in decoupling Regents exams and diploma requirements came about because of an unprecedented public health emergency, it showed that another way is possible: we do not have to go back to a pre-pandemic system that was keeping far too many students from graduating. For example, in 2019—the last year unaffected by the pandemic—only 39% of the State's English Language Learners and 61% of students with disabilities graduated in four years.

We appreciate the steps you have taken to deemphasize standardized testing during the pandemic and encourage you to go further. The federal Every Student Succeeds Act (ESSA) requires states to test students in English language arts, math, and science at least once in high school, but the law does not require tying performance on these exams to graduation. In fact, New York is an outlier, one of only eleven states that require students to pass exit exams in order to earn a diploma. Some states that give exams similar to the Regents to meet ESSA's accountability mandates factor a student's score into their overall grade in the class, much like any other final exam, rather than making the test a stand-alone requirement. Federal policy does not prevent the Board of Regents from permanently eliminating the passing of Regents exams as a condition for high school graduation.

Importantly, decoupling exams from graduation requirements does not mean lowering standards. There is no evidence to support the idea that high school exit exams increase student achievement in reading or math, nor have researchers found that exit exams improve employment outcomes or earnings for young adults who do not go on to postsecondary education. There is evidence, however, that such exams may push students on the margins away from rigorous coursework and do increase high school dropout rates, particularly for students of color and students from low-income backgrounds.

In addition, the current system—with its multitude of appeals, exceptions, and special determinations—is too complex, making it nearly impossible for many families and schools to figure out what appeals, exemptions, and options individual students are eligible for and what they need to do in order to graduate.

The State Education Department and the Board of Regents have the power to decouple Regents exams from diploma requirements, and we urge you to do so immediately to help ensure that students who have passed all their courses are able to graduate from high school and pursue their postsecondary goals.

Thank you for your consideration.
